

Question 8

What does the Humanities Lab do?

Answer

Based on the context, the Humanities Lab is a research institution that conducts various activities, including research, development, and education. This is evident from the research projects and reports mentioned, which cover a range of topics such as digital tools in the humanities (Researcher: Elisabet Göransson), research collaborations (Researcher: Johan Frid), and the development of policies for digital research infrastructures (Researcher: Anna Foka et al.).

Specifically, the Lund University Humanities Lab Annual Reports (various years) suggest that the lab is involved in research, development, and education in the humanities, and that it has a strong focus on digital humanities and research infrastructures.

For example, the 2010-2011 report (Researcher: Marianne Gullberg) mentions the lab's work on digital tools and methods, while the 2013-2014 report (Researcher: Marianne Gullberg) highlights the lab's efforts to establish a research infrastructure for the humanities. The 2020 report (Researcher: Marianne Gullberg, Victoria Johansson) mentions the lab's work on digital humanities and research infrastructures, and the 2022 report (Researcher: Marianne Gullberg, Victoria Johansson, Frida Splendido) highlights the lab's efforts to establish a sustainable and open research infrastructure.

Overall, the Humanities Lab appears to be a research institution that is actively engaged in the development and application of digital tools and methods in the humanities, as well as the establishment of research infrastructures and policies to support this work.